About our speaker

Tamara Bozovic is a transport planner with a love for the cities.

She has been working for 14 years, always with the aim to contribute to better places, pleasant to live in, easy to get around by people of all ages and abilities, and more efficient.

She sees her job as going hand in hand with good land use planning and urban design.

Tamara has worked with urban designers on all urban scales, from a metro public transport master plan to local street redesigns through collaborations on multi modal interfaces design. After working in Switzerland and Argentina, she is now a Principal Transport Planner with the NZTA (System Design and Delivery, Target Rapid Growth).

Her role helps shape more integrated systems for the rapidly growing urban areas, providing decision support for achieving better social outcomes.

About the evening

Join us for a conversation with Tamara

Tamara has recently completed a study trip to Vancouver, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco. She will discuss these cities' similarities with New Zealand and their recent successes on topics that are hot for us now, such as accommodating growth while increasing liveability, improving the public realm or revitalizing urban centres.

We'll delve into the integration between the transport systems with the urban development, and the ways it was achieved to successfully trigger good reactions in the urban metabolism. Looking at it from 3 angles:

1. Urban intensification facilitated by transport systems, contributing to the attractiveness of brownfield locations
2. Modal shift used as potential for unlocking the potentials of streets as public spaces
3. Intensification allowing for new efficient transport solutions, in particular PT interconnected with walkable or cyclable "last miles"

Q&A

Following Tamara's discussion, there'll be a Q+A session.
